

The University of Texas

Institute for Health Policy

AT THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH

Kimberly Flores holds a Masters in Human Services Administration from St. Edwards University and a Bachelor's degree in Political Science and Psychology from Texas A&M University. Kimberly has worked on maternal child health issues, as well as health policies affecting the aging population. Her experience with social policy was honed with a research assistant position in Washington DC and policy positions for state government. She also worked for a coalition of nonprofits in Central Texas exploring barriers to basic needs for marginalized populations.

Kimberly is joining the institute to continue researching innovative strategies to affect positive change in health policy.
